

CENTER FOR GLOBAL DEVELOPMENT
PARTNERS COUNCIL

The Center for Global Development's community of investors plays a crucial role in our efforts to discover and promote practical ways to reduce global poverty and inequality and to make the world a more prosperous, just, and safe place for us all. Our impact relies on the individuals and corporations who join in our deliberations and support our work.

The Partners Council is a non-governing membership body whose participants help us through financial contributions by attracting other potential supporters, and by serving as advocates for CGD's mission in their professional and social communities. Members are highly respected citizens of the world who value being engaged in global development.

Through private breakfasts, access to senior fellows, policymakers, and more, members have the opportunity to meet leading figures in development and gain new insights about the issues of the day. Members bring valued resources to CGD, through their social and professional ties as well as through their philanthropic commitment to our work.

Membership Benefits

Members interact in off-the-record conversations with noted thinkers and practitioners in government, policy, and business. Preferential access to CGD's intellectual capital includes lively discussions with CGD's top researchers and analysts, and advance copies of CGD research, working group reports, books, and policy briefs.

Frequently Asked Questions

Who are members of the Partners Council?

The Partners Council's membership includes firms and individuals. Individual members come from a wide variety of backgrounds, including politics, academia, philanthropy, and the private voluntary sector. Corporations are drawn from a wide range of business sectors, including financial services, law, energy, consulting, technology, and media.

For corporate members, who makes decisions about membership in the Partners Council?

Each member corporation designates one executive to serve as a liaison between the company and CGD. This liaison or primary contact provides CGD information about the company's development-related interests, so that we can customize the resources and services that we offer. The primary contact also identifies executives to receive event invitations and subscriptions to newsletters, and may nominate executives to participate in special activities.

How can I get information about upcoming events?

Invitations for CGD events are sent via email to Partners Council members. A quarterly e-newsletter, The Partnership, also highlights upcoming events, past activities, and updates on areas of interest to the members.

What is the annual Partners Council Summit?

Held on the second Tuesday of each November, the Partners Council Summit is a half-day, off-the-record meeting where fellow members can interact with each other, CGD experts, and high-level external guests around a common agenda in development. Previous guest speakers have included Madeleine Albright, Tony Fratto, David Gergen, and Alice Rivlin.

Whom should I contact with a question or request?
