

Index

- Analytical framework for evaluation of Latin American economies: assessment of democratic governance, 12, 14–15; assessment of financial openness, 7–11; classification of reform strategies, 56–57; common features of recommendations, 35; distinctive features, 17; findings from case studies, 23–32, 43–53, 63–65; foundations for growth, 20, 21–22, 54–56; goals, 17–18, 34–35, 53–54; main elements, 17–23; need for, 5–6; reasons for poor reform outcomes, 58–61; recommendations arising from case study findings, 32–34, 35. See also Foundations for economic growth
- Argentina, 4, 7, 43
- Basel Committee for Banking Supervision, 58–59, 60, 61
- Bolivia, 59
- Bonds, international, 9, 21
- Brady Plan, 9
- Brazil: anti-market aspects of reforms, 69, 78–83, 106; constitutional reforms, 69, 83, 93, 106; corruption, 104–05; distribution of wealth and benefits of growth, 72–75, 77–78, 80–81, 86–87, 106–07; economic performance, 70–72; educational reform, 88, 97–101; financial sector reform, 87, 96–97; fiscal reform, 69, 76, 81, 87, 88–92; future challenges and opportunities, 74, 107–08; growth decomposition, 72; income per capita, 4; judicial system, 33, 87, 92–96; labor regulation, 81; macroeconomic policy and performance, 29–30, 79–80, 86, 107; motivation for income transfers, 24; policy reforms and outcomes, 23, 25, 29–30, 43, 75–86, 106–07; political obstacles to reform implementation, 60, 83–86, 103, 106–07; political reforms, 103–06; poverty, 73; productivity, 71–72, 78, 81, 106; property rights regime, 28, 30, 33, 77, 79–80, 84, 86, 94, 107; reasons for poor reform outcomes, 68–69, 71, 78, 79–82, 106–07; recent changes in pace of reform, 81–82; recommendations for reform agenda, 33, 89–106; regulatory reform, 101–03; significance of reform experience, 68, 70;

- social security and pension systems, 78, 81, 88, 89–91; social spending, 74–75, 78, 79, 80–81, 84–85, 106, 107; strategies to enhance foundations for growth, 86–88; targeting of reforms, 68–69, 76; tax policy, 29, 74–75, 76, 79, 81, 88, 91–92, 96; trade policies, 76, 77. See also Latin America
- Capital account liberalization, 7–11, 21
- CGD framework. See Analytical framework for evaluation of Latin American economies
- Chile, 3, 4, 5, 41, 43, 49
- Colombia: constitutional reform, 114, 123–24; decentralization of governance and social services, 114, 122, 137–39, 148–49; distributive goals of reforms, 118, 120; distributive outcomes of reforms, 116, 122–24; economic development, 112–13; educational system, 141–44; financial sector regulation, 120, 121, 126–27, 132–35, 147; fiscal policy, 115–16, 135–36, 137–39; goals of 1990s reforms, 114, 118–24; health care system, 122–23, 126, 139–41, 149; infant mortality, 45; judicial system, 33–34, 123–24, 125–27, 144–45; labor regulation, 120–21, 125, 129–31, 146–47; macroeconomic policy and performance, 30–31, 118–20, 121–22; motivation for income transfers, 24; pension system, 121–22, 126, 136–37; policy reforms and outcomes, 25, 30–31, 112–18, 124–44, 149–50; political reforms and outcomes, 127–29, 145–46; poverty, 45, 116–18; productivity, 112, 114; property rights policies, 114; reasons for poor reform outcomes, 118, 124–25, 156–60; recommendations for policy reform, 33–34, 118, 144–49; reforms to enhance competition, 114, 118, 120–21; social service delivery, 34; tax policies, 122, 126, 131–32, 148; trade policies, 120. See also Latin America
- Colombia’s reforms to enhance, 114, 118, 120–21, 127–28, 132–33; Costa Rica’s reform experience, 31, 161, 164, 188; foundations for economic growth, 21, 55; Mexico’s reforms and outcomes, 29, 194, 216–24, 226, 227, 229–32; negative outcomes of reforms to improve political access, 128–29; Peru’s reform outcomes, 245; recommendations arising from case study findings, 33. See also Foundations for economic growth
- Corruption, 104–05
- Costa Rica: administrative reform in government, 160–61, 169–74; distributive goals of reforms, 164; distributive outcomes of reforms, 157–58, 188–89; electoral law, 166–68; exchange rate, 184–85; foreign direct investment, 182, 183–84; future challenges and opportunities, 160, 174–75; goals of reforms, 161–62; governance structure and performance, 34; immigration into, 158; legislative reform, 160, 162–69; macroeconomic policies and performance, 31, 161, 164, 188, 190; policy reforms and outcomes, 23, 25, 31–32, 153, 155; political context of policy reforms, 31–32, 155–56, 159–60, 177–78, 190–91; poverty, 156–57, 158, 188, 189; property rights regime, 26–28, 164, 187–88; public debt, 175; recent economic performance, 154–56; recommendations for policy reform, 34, 167–69, 173–74, 177–79, 182, 185–87; referenda, 168–69; reforms to enhance competition, 164, 188; significance of reform experience, 153–54, 187–91; social service delivery, 158–59; tax policy, 161, 174–79; telecommunications industry, 161, 162, 179–82; trade policy, 162, 182–87; transportation infrastructure, 171–73. See also Latin America
- Dominican Republic, 63
- Economic development: analytical approaches, 17–18; Brazil, 70–72; Colombia, 112–13; Costa Rica, 154–56;
- Competition, economic and political:
Brazil’s reform goals and outcomes, 76–77, 79–80, 96–97; case study reforms and outcomes, 24, 25;

- distinctive features of Latin American economies, 6–7; educational reform linkage, 253–54; financial openness of national economy and, 7–11; findings from Latin American case studies, 23; future challenges and opportunities, 4–5, 11–12, 41; identifying constraints to, 18–19; income inequality and, 16–17, 47–53; institutional capacity and, 18, 21, 59, 60, 64; international comparison, 40–41; Latin America’s experience, 1–2, 38–41; Mexico, 195–96, 202; Peru, 236, 237, 238–39, 241; reasons for reform failures, 46–53; reform goals not related to economic growth, 43–46; second generation reform strategies, 18; social welfare spending and, 30–31. See also Analytical framework for evaluation of Latin American economies; Foundations for economic growth; Gross domestic product; Income per capita
- Educational attainment: disparities in Latin America, 49–50, 53; economic growth linkage, 253–54; poverty and, 254–56
- Educational reform: Brazil, 88, 97–101; Colombia, 141–44; Costa Rica, 169; decentralization effort, 258, 261–62; government intervention rationale, 244; performance evaluation and merit rewards, 258–59, 263–64; Peru, 253–66
- Energy sector, Brazil, 102–03
- Environmental protection, Brazil, 102
- Financial services: access, 49, 62, 134, 135, 214–15; Brazil, 87, 96–97; Colombia, 120, 121, 126–27, 132–35, 147; judicial system as obstacle to reform, 229; Mexico, 214–15, 224–32; Peru, 248; property rights regime and, 229
- Fiscal policy reforms: Brazil, 69, 81, 87, 88–92; Colombia, 115–16, 135–36, 137–39; Costa Rica, 174–79; Peru, 242–44
- Foreign direct investment in Costa Rica, 182, 183–84
- Foundations for economic growth: benefits of trade liberalization, 183; Brazil’s reform policies and outcomes, 76–78, 86–87; Colombia’s reform policies and outcomes, 111, 114, 118–24; conceptual evolution, 18–20; Costa Rica’s reform policies and outcomes, 161–62, 187–88; democratization and, 244; foundations, 21–22, 54–56; goals for case study analyses, 53–54; government role, 54; importance of, 56; market economies and, 54–55; Mexico’s policies and outcomes, 196–200, 214–15, 218–19, 228–29; obstacles to positive reform effects, 58–61; public sector administration effects on, 169; reform outcomes in case studies, 23–32, 63–65; reform outcomes in Peru, 242–46, 282–83; strategies for strengthening, 25–28, 56–58; targeting, 68–69; weakening of, as reform outcome, 28–32. See also Competition, economic and political; Inequities in income and access to opportunity; Macroeconomic policy; Property rights
- Global Emerging Market Bond Index, 21
- Gross domestic product: Brazil, 70, 71–72; Colombia, 112; Costa Rica, 154; Peru, 247; recent performance in Latin America, 1–2. See also Income/GDP per capita
- Guatemala, 4
- Health care system, Colombia, 45, 139–41, 149
- Honduras, 7
- Human Development Index, 3
- Income/GDP per capita: Brazil, 70–71, 73–74; Costa Rica, 155; Mexico, 193, 195, 202; patterns and trends in Latin America, 1–2, 4, 38–40; Peru, 238; reform goals not related to growth in, 43–46. See also Inequities in income and access to opportunity
- Inequities in income and access to opportunity: Brazil, 72–75, 77–78, 80–81, 83–87, 106–07; causes, 16; Colombia, 114, 116, 118, 120, 122–24, 134, 135; Costa Rica, 157–58, 161, 164, 188–89; democratic governance in Latin America and, 47–48, 83–86, 106; distinctive features of Latin American economies, 6–7, 16, 17; economic

- development and, 16–17; educational attainment and, 254–56, 264–65; financial services access, 49, 62, 134, 135, 214–15; foundations for economic growth and, 21, 22, 55–56; goals of labor reform, 244; implications for policy development and performance, 17, 47, 48–53, 64; international comparison, 2–4, 48; judicial system access, 123–24, 125; Mexico, 198, 199, 200–01, 207, 214–15; obstacles to successful reform, 60–61, 64, 84; patterns and trends, 2–4, 16, 40; Peru, 28, 239–41, 245–46, 254–56, 264–65; political motivations for transfers, 24, 30, 83–84, 106; public perception, 55–56; social spending and, 74–75; strategies for improving, 64; trade liberalization outcomes, 207; urban–rural, 28. See also Foundations for economic growth
- Institutional capacity, economic development and, 18, 21, 59, 60, 64
- International comparison: access to services and benefits, 48–49; Brazil’s growth decomposition, 72; democratic governance, 12–14; economic performance, 40–41; financial openness, 7; income distribution patterns and trends, 2–4, 48
- Judicial system: Brazil, 87, 92–96; Colombia, 33–34, 123–24, 125–27, 144–45; costs of improved access, 125–27; goals, 244; legislative review function, 34; Mexico, 213–16, 221–22, 229; obstacles to financial sector reform, 229; performance indicators, 93–94; recommendations for reform, 33–34, 94–95, 144–45, 214–16
- Labor regulation: Brazil, 81; Colombia, 120–21, 125, 129–31, 146–47; to increase equality of opportunity, 244
- Land ownership, 48–49
- Latin America: common features of reform outcomes, 40; distinctive economic features, 6–7; diversity among countries of, 5, 54; economic performance, 1–2, 38–41; financial openness, 7–12; future challenges and opportunities, 4–5, 11–12, 15–16, 41; governance trends, 12–14; income gap patterns and trends, 2–3, 16–17, 48–49; land ownership patterns, 48–49; political environment, 12–16, 41; property rights regimes, 26–28; reasons for poor outcomes of reforms, 43–53; recent reform history, 41–43; recommendations for reform, 35. See also Analytical framework for evaluation of Latin American economies; Brazil; Colombia; Costa Rica; Mexico; Peru
- Legislative function of Government: Colombia’s reforms, 146; Costa Rica’s reforms, 160, 162–69; judicial system review, 34; shortcomings in Peru, 270–74, 279–80. See also Political functioning
- Macroeconomic policy: access to international capital and, 9–11; Brazil, 29–30, 79–80, 86, 107; case study reforms and outcomes, 25–26, 29–31; central bank autonomy, 26; Colombia, 114, 118–20, 121–22; Costa Rica, 161, 164, 188, 190; foundations for economic growth, 21–22, 55; future challenges and opportunities, 11–12; Mexico, 197–98; Peru, 245–46. See also Foundations for economic growth
- Market-based economy: anti-market aspects of Brazil’s reforms, 78–83, 106; anti-market political movements, 42–43; foundations for growth in Latin America, 54–55; Mexico’s reform goals, 192–93; Peru’s structural reforms, 247; public perception of market liberalization, 15–16; social welfare programs and, 30–31, 63; targeting problems in Brazil’s reforms, 68–69
- Market entry: barriers to, 55; case study reforms and outcomes, 25; foundations for economic growth, 21, 55; recommendations for reform in Mexico, 231
- Mexico: competition policy, 33, 194, 216–24; distribution of wealth and access, 198, 199, 200–01; financial sector, 224–32; foundations for economic growth, 196–200, 214–15, 218–19, 228–29; growth decomposition,

- 196; income per capita, 4; legal and judicial system, 213–16, 221–22, 229; lost decade, 192; macroeconomic policies, 197–98; obstacles to successful reform, 215–16, 219–21, 229–30; pension system, 207–09, 211; political context of reforms, 193–94, 203–05; poverty, 198–99; privatization effort, 29, 209–11; property rights regime, 28, 197, 214–15; public sector debt, 198; reasons for poor reform outcomes, 193–94, 202–12; recent economic performance, 4, 195–96, 202; recommendations for reform, 33, 194, 195, 207, 212, 214–16, 222–24, 230–32; significance of reform experience, 192–95, 232; total factor productivity, 195, 196; trade policy, 203–04, 206–07, 212. See also Latin America
- Nicaragua, 4
- North American Free Trade Association, 204, 206–07
- Panama, 4
- Pension reform: Brazil, 78, 81, 88, 89–91; Colombia, 121–22, 126, 136–37; Mexico, 207–09, 211; minimum retirement age, 89–90; negative effects, 59; Peru, 59, 62, 247–48
- Peru: central bank autonomy, 26; decentralization of governance, 250–51, 253, 258, 261–62; distribution of income and growth benefits, 239–41, 245–46; economic performance, 236, 237, 238, 241; education system, 253–66; financial sector reforms, 248; fiscal policies, 242–44; foundations of growth, 242–46; future prospects, 237, 241; governance problems, 268–74; growth decomposition, 238–39; macroeconomic policies, 26; macroeconomic stability, 242–44, 245–46; pension reform, 59, 62, 247–48; policy reforms and outcomes, 23, 25, 26, 43, 236–37, 245–51, 254–62, 266, 280–81; political environment, 32–33, 237–38, 259–60, 266–68, 274–77; poverty and poverty reduction efforts, 28–29, 239–41, 254–56; property rights regime, 28, 245; public administration and civil service, 248–53; public service delivery, 32, 283; reasons for poor reform outcomes, 248–51, 253–56, 266–77, 281–82; recommendations for policy reform and implementation, 32–33, 251–53, 262–66, 277–80; successful reforms, 246–48; urban–rural differences, 237, 241, 247. See also Latin America
- Pilot projects: recommendations for public service delivery reform in Peru, 32; strategies for successful policy implementation, 35
- Policy reforms and outcomes: analytical framework for Latin American economies, 5–6; Brazil, 75–86; capital account liberalization, 7–9; classification of reform strategies, 56–57; Colombia, 111–12, 113–18, 124–44, 149–50; consideration of local conditions, 46, 58–59, 60–61, 62–63; Costa Rica, 153, 155, 156–60; design problems, 59–60; financial openness of Latin American economies, 7–12; findings from Latin American case studies, 23–32, 43–53, 63–65; focus on constraints to growth, 18–19; foundations for economic growth, 18, 19–20, 21–22, 54–56; income inequality and, 17, 49–53, 64; institutional capacity, 60; international market considerations, 21; Mexico, 192–95, 202–12; Peru, 23, 25, 26, 236–37, 245–51, 254–62, 266, 280–82; political context, 14–15, 203–05; reasons for reform failure or poor performance, 43, 46–53, 58–61, 68–69, 79–82; recommendations arising from case study findings, 32–34, 35; reform goals not related to growth, 43–46; sequencing of reforms, 59, 189–90; social welfare programs, market-oriented reforms and, 30–31; strategies for successful implementation, 35, 61–63; unintended consequences, 28. See also Foundations for economic growth; Macroeconomic policy; Trade policy
- Political functioning: anti-market movement, 42–43; Brazil's development, 76, 103–06; Brazil's reforms and

- outcomes, 83–86, 107–08; Colombia's judicial system, 33–34; Colombia's reforms and outcomes, 127–29; communication between government and civil society, 35; corruption, 104–05; Costa Rica's reform experience, 31–32, 155–56, 159–60, 177–78, 181–82, 190–91; democratic governance in Latin America, 12–16, 47–48; distinctive features of Latin American economies, 6; economic policy formulation and, 14–15; foundations for economic growth, 21, 22, 55–56; future challenges for reform efforts, 41, 107–08; income inequality in Latin America and, 47–48, 83–86; indicators of democratic governance, 12; Mexico's reform policies and, 193–94, 203–05; motivations for income transfers, 24, 30; need for administrative reform in Costa Rica, 160–61, 169–74; need for governance reform in Peru, 32, 268–74, 277–78; need for legislative reform in Costa Rica, 160, 162–69; obstacles to effective reform implementation, 60, 64–65, 266–67; obstacles to public sector administrative reform, 170, 173–74; obstacles to tax reform, 177–78; obstacles to telecommunications reform, 181–82; party fragmentation, 104–05; Peru, 237–38, 259–60, 266–68, 274–77; recommendations for reform in Brazil, 88; recommendations for reform in Colombia, 145–46; regulatory reform and, 103; trends in Latin America, 41. See also Competition, economic and political; Legislative function of government; Public opinion and understanding
- Poverty: Brazil, 73; Colombia, 45, 116–18; Costa Rica, 156–57, 158, 188, 189; education and, 254–56; measurement, 45; Mexico, 198–99; Peru, 28–29, 239–41, 254–56
- Privatization, 60; Brazil, 102, 103; Mexico's experience, 29, 209–11; obstacles to telecommunications reform in Costa Rica, 180–82
- Productivity: Brazil, 71–72, 78, 81, 106; Colombia, 112, 114; Costa Rica, 154; foundations of growth concept, 18, 189; Mexico, 195; Peru, 238
- Property rights: Brazil's policies and outcomes, 77, 79–80, 84, 86, 94, 107; case study reforms and outcomes, 24, 26–28, 30; Costa Rica, 164, 187–88; financial sector reform and, 229; foundations for economic growth, 21, 54–55; goals of Colombia's 1990s reforms, 114; judicial system functioning for protection of, 244; land ownership patterns in Latin America, 48–49; Mexico's policies and outcomes, 197; Peru, 28, 245; recommendations for policy reform, 33, 107. See also Foundations for economic growth
- Public perception and understanding: communication between government and civil society, 35; educational reform efforts in Peru, 259–60; foundations for economic growth, 55–56; future challenges for reform efforts, 41, 108; future prospects for Latin American economies, 15–16; judicial system reform, 94–95; market economies, 15; of reform outcomes, 108; strategies for reform implementation, 190, 191; support for educational reform, 100–01
- Public service delivery. See Welfare programs and public spending
- Securitization of government liabilities, 9
- Spence Report, 20
- Tax policy: Brazil, 29, 74–75, 79, 81, 88, 91–92, 96; Colombia, 122, 126, 131–32, 148; Costa Rica, 161, 174–79; distribution effects of social spending and, 74–75
- Telecommunications industry, Costa Rica, 161, 162, 179–82
- Trade policy: access to international capital and, 10–11; Brazil, 76, 77; Colombia, 120; Costa Rica, 162, 182–87; Mexico, 203–04, 206–07, 212; sequencing of reforms, 59
- Transportation infrastructure, Costa Rica, 171–73
- Unintended consequences of policy reforms, 28

- Urban–rural differences: income inequality,
28; Peru, 237, 241, 247
- Venezuela, 4, 5, 7, 43
- Washington consensus, 18, 24, 153, 237
- Welfare programs and public spending:
Brazil, 74–75, 78, 80–81, 84–85, 107;
Colombia, 31, 122–23; consensual
definition of adequate services, 34;
Costa Rica, 31, 158–59, 169–74;
market-oriented reform and, 30–31, 63;
Peru, 32, 283; reform goals based on improving, 43–46; regional approach,
32; results-based budgeting, 252–53.
See also Pension reform